

A combination of focused coursework with language study and an international study experience are features of the International Business major. Students spend at least one semester in an international location where they live, study, and work. Your international experience may come via Valpo's study centers in Cambridge, England; Reutlingen, Germany; Hangzhou, China; Puebla, Mexico; or in France, Japan or a variety of other global locales.

International Business majors take courses including:

- Cross-Cultural Management
- International Finance
- International Marketing
- Global Operations and Supply-side Management
- International Business Environment and Global Strategy
- International Economics or Economics of Developing Nations
