Diversity in Legal Education and the Legal Profession

A Symposium Honoring Indiana Chief Justice
Randall T. Shepard

Chief Justice Randall T. Shepard stepped down last year after serving on the Indiana Supreme Court for 27 years. At the time of his appointment, he was the youngest Chief Justice in the country. Chief Justice Shepard earned his degrees from Princeton University, Yale Law School and University of Virginia Law School. He has received numerous awards recognizing his leadership and his commitment to diversity in the legal profession, including the Norma Wickler Excellence in Service Award from the National Association of Women Judges and the Lifetime Achievement Award from the Indiana Black Expo. Since stepping down from the bench, he has remained active in law teaching and was named last year as Chair of the American Bar Association's Task Force on the Future of Legal Education.

In creating the Indiana Conference for Legal Education Opportunity ("ICLEO") program, Chief Justice Randall Shepard took a significant step in ensuring that all citizens are truly equal in the eyes of the law. Indiana became the first state in the nation to have its own CLEO program to assist minority, low-income or educationally disadvantaged college graduates in pursuing law degrees. The ICLEO model has now been adopted by other states.

About the Law Review

Founded in 1967, the Valparaiso University Law Review is one of the oldest Law Reviews in the Midwest. The Valparaiso Law Review is a scholarly journal that publishes articles, lectures, and book reviews submitted by law professors, judges, practitioners, and student notes submitted by members of the Law Review.

The Law Review is comprised solely of Valparaiso law students and publishes four issues each year. It affords qualified students an invaluable opportunity for training in precise analysis of legal problems and in clear presentation of legal issues. In addition, law review membership enhances a student's legal research, writing, and analytical skills.
